forced displacement by non-Native settlers, and the ongoing injustices against Native peoples.

That's a really great question, Carl. The term BIPOC centers the experiences of Black and Indigenous peoples who are deeply impacted by legacies of slavery, colonization and genocide.

13:31:37 From Carl Jaskolski to Everyone:

Why are we still using diversity to bring people together where the root of the word 'div' is about separating; division, divide, divorce, etcetera? Unless it is done very well, then it is divine. More emphasis should be on inclusiversity, integration and equity.

13:37:02 From Maica Lelis-Her to Everyone:

@Lalitha Thank you for providing resource, content, and answering question. I think you have provided enough resource for us to read and learn on our own.

13:37:07 From Catherine Seavey to Everyone:

@Carl it is a decision many black activists have pushed for. The separation is purposeful because the experiences of black people are not the same as the experiences of other people of color. There's nothing wrong with disagreeing, but it's important to understand why we want that distinction.

13:37:21 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Eric, I can certainly speak to that; we created an affinity group at my organization made up of BIPOC faculty librarians; a safe group for us to talk and support each other in personal and professional ways. Our work impacted recruitment and retention – at least 2 tenure track librarians were internal hires (as a result of mentorship from this affinity group)

13:37:22 From Carl Jaskolski to Everyone:

Embracing and acceptance is not the purpose or goal of inclusion. Rather, valuing inclusion means acknowledging that other people, other races, other voices, and other cultures have as much integrity and as much claim on the world as you do. It is the recognition there are other ways of seeing the world, solving problems, and working together. Finally, it is important to remember the goal of any inclusion initiative is not to change people's perceptions, or eliminate whatever prejudices or belief systems they hold, but rather to focus pragmatically on what is expected in the workplace, and what will provide a good and productive working environment for every employee. Can a group be formed that has synergy (greater than the sum of our parts) by focusing on and promoting that which makes each one different? Or, would they most likely be able to unite by focusing on common beliefs, which brings them together? Something to think about!

13:37:23 From Christine Johnson to Everyone:

For smaller organizations like ours with no BIPOC staff members, how do you suggest we begin the conversation within our organization?

13:38:35 From Celeste Bocchicchio-Chaudhri to Everyone:

13:40:02 From Jessica C Williams to Everyone:

+1 for @Chrstine J.'s question

13:40:13 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Carl, it's difficult to focus on "common beliefs" when our life experiences are so different from each other. How can we "unite" if we don't openly acknowledge difference first?

13:40:37 From Carl Jaskolski to Everyone:

Celeste, I am listening and critically analyzing what is be said to the topic.

13:41:26 From Anthony Buchanan to Everyone:

How do we push forward when working in an environment where so many staff are, for lack of a lengthy nuanced discussion, alienated from the organization? Is there a way to really kick this kind of work up a notch?

13:41:34 From Taylor Schaffter to Everyone:

@Carl - I have to say that I disagree with your point on focusing on commonalities rather than ackno

13:41:44 From Taylor Schaffter to Everyone:

Acknowledging our differences*

13:42:08 From Taylor Schaffter to Everyone:

I see it as minimization of the lived experiences of individuals.

13:42:11 From Ricky Newson to Everyone:

Issues of race appear to be more of an issue depending on the location on the library. Addressing the issue will be more difficult in some areas than others. As such how can the promotion of a more equal work place be addressed depending on the environment. How can we adjust it in an environment that is more racially biased compared to one that is less?

13:42:22 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

I also think that any mention of pragmatism and fostering "good and productive working environments" without critiquing the structures and policies that have historically centered whiteness is questionable.

13:42:22 From Tonya Swan to Everyone:

instead of debating Shouldn't we focus on our panelists who have given us their valuable time?

13:42:24 From Nina Darlington to Everyone:

+1 for @Christine J.'s question

13:42:32 From Mary Kapusta to Everyone:

Can the panel share some best practices and first steps in setting up employee resource groups?

13:42:40 From Carl Jaskolski to All panelists:

In a world where racial differences often lead to separation and conflict, it's imperative that we all work for unity and peace. Detecting your biases, prejudices and/or stereotypes is the first step to being released from it.

13:42:44 From Richard Thornley to Everyone:

Important to recognize that critics of efforts of inclusion often dismiss, disparage, and deny those efforts as divisive and "identity politics". @Carl listen and learn before you jump in with your criticism

13:42:50 From Danis Houser to All panelists:

@Lalitha I feel like it is acceptance of the lack of common beliefs that separates authentic allies willing to put in the work in the long term from lip service.

13:42:54 From Rachel Bergquist to Everyone:

I'm saddened by the choice of "White Supremacy" as the term coined by the younger generation to help navigate the course of this great work. Older generations associate it strictly with Adolf Hitler. I don't think most people associate white supremacy with Hitler. And we almost all had family members who fought in WWII. as librarians, we know that words have power. I agree with Natalie in that when the term "white supremacy" in this context will conjure images of the KKK and other hate groups. I was really surprised recently to see Nicole Hannah-Jones, the author of The 1619 Project, question a component of Tema Okun's White Supremacist Culture framework recently. Particularly, the sense of urgency piece. It made me wonder about whether or not or how to use the model going forward. I'm wondering if the panelists had any sort of thoughts on this or questions like this about this model.

13:55:49 From Celeste Bocchicchio-Chaudhri to Everyone:

How do you deal with management that talks the talk but does not walk the walk when it comes to racial equity?

13:55:50 From akunna eneh to Everyone:

agreed, @yesenia! <3

13:56:03 From Taylor Schaffter to Everyone:

@Lalitha Sure thing! It was just a Twitter thread, but here's the tweet that really stood out to me:

<https://twitter.com/nhannahjones/status/1391851223570010112?s=20>

13:56:03 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Yes, Maica, I've noted that several libraries have started hiring Equity and Inclusion Managers

13:56:08 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Thank you, Taylor!

13:56:29 From Natalie Ruppert to Everyone:

Thanks to all the panelists!

13:56:44 From missy solis to Everyone:

Creating safe places for conversations is key.

13:56:49 From Yesenia Villar to Everyone:
Read my ALA Blog post on Disrupting Racial Inequity:
<http://www.ala.org/advocacy/diversity/odlos-blog/disrupting-racial-inequity>

13:56:51 From Jenaya Myvett to Everyone:
Lived and Learned experiences are sooooo important

13:57:05 From Dana Nothnagel to Everyone:
The importance of affinity groups! Also how "white womanhood" has shaped library professional norms. Thank you so much for this!

13:57:06 From Megan Garza to All panelists:
I'm really reflecting on what was said today about the idea of "professionalism" as a construct of white supremacy, especially around gossip. Thank you to all panelists!

13:57:13 From Julie Dahlhauser to Everyone:
"Center the voices of BIPOC people"

13:57:19 From Sonia Alcantara-Antoine to Everyone:
My takeaway is that there needs to be more space for people to discuss this topic in depth. All of the conversation in the chat box were interesting but distracting. :)

13:57:26 From Suzanne Flynn to All panelists:
The microaggressions. How people in power wield that power to silence the workers under the auspices of "professionalism"

13:57:33 From Morgan Mullins to Everyone:
YES, always look at your demographics and who you are/aren't serving!

13:57:33 From Yesenia Villar to Everyone:
On confronting white supremacy in the workplace:
https://www.librarianswithspines.com/post/bipoc_in_lis-speaking-truth-to-power-one-instagram-post-at-a-time

13:57:40 From Catherine Seavey to Everyone:
My biggest take away was supporting and engaging the community. Not being paternalistic and understanding that one person (all staff included) can't have all the answers. We need voices from all levels of leadership and within the community to better serve our patrons.

13:57:40 From Deborah Brewer to Everyone:
Really appreciate the links to articles and videos. Recommendations really count.

13:57:56 From Mary Douglas to Everyone:
My takeaway from today: We have to be intentional about hiring / listening to people of color.

13:57:58 From Kinshasa Vargas-Pile to Everyone:
As a BIPOC- Grateful for this conversation

13:58:01 From Krissy Jensen to Everyone:
One Take-away: increasing staff diversity will only succeed if the internal culture is addressed.

13:58:08 From Julie Dahlhauser to Everyone:
I'm hoping all these great links will be available to participants. I've stopped trying to keep up so I can listen better

13:58:10 From Teresa Miller to All panelists:
I have so many tabs open of articles to read after this!

13:58:10 From Karen Astorga to Everyone:
I learned from Chantel that one must reflect and tweek what needs to be tweaked. It's a process to get the full inclusion.

13:58:15 From Danis Houser to All panelists:

I appreciate the emphasis on inclusion being a process and not a one-size-fits-all solution.

13:58:16 From Sonia Perez to All panelists:

What are examples of data can we look at in researching about equity?

13:58:16 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Highly recommending this article by April Hathcock:
<https://www.inthelibrarywiththeleadpipe.org/2015/lis-diversity/>

13:58:19 From Teresa Miller to Everyone:

I have so many tabs open of articles to read after this!

13:58:19 From M.G. Maloney to All panelists:

James has his hand up!

13:58:24 From Jennifer Hamlin to Everyone:

I am willing to share this conversation with my coworkers

13:58:27 From Julie Milavec to All panelists:

Thank you for all of the books, articles, and links!

13:58:34 From Enola Romano to Everyone:

course correct, then implement, then repeat

13:58:36 From akunna eneh to Everyone:

as a BIPOC person, this panel was super validating, affirming...I needed that. thank you

13:58:37 From James Allen Davis Jr, (he/him) to Everyone:

Thank you,

13:58:37 From Tulip Majumdar to Everyone:

@ Teresa me too!

13:58:38 From Lee Burkhalter to Everyone:

taking away a lot of resources and information and desire to support my BIPOC colleagues

13:58:43 From Deb Ripley to Everyone:

Approaching cultural change from why we're doing this work.

13:58:46 From Karen Lemke to Everyone:

What is the best data to use? How do you get the best data?

13:58:49 From Steph Niemeyer to Everyone:

Thank you panelists! This has been an amazing discussion.

13:58:54 From Rachel Bergquist to Everyone:

Just really grateful for being able to listen, and for all the great resources! Thanks to all, and @Lalitha for your attentiveness and responsiveness to the chat :)

13:59:08 From Yolanda Poston to Everyone:

Thank you for this frank and professional discussion

13:59:10 From Richard Thornley to Everyone:

Take home: really liked the social work quote "nothing about us without us"

13:59:16 From Monica Porter to Everyone:

The takeaway for me are all of the great resources shared to get the work started. Thank you all so much for this conversation and presentation!

13:59:21 From Phyllis Potter to Everyone:

Lots of good information and things to think about.

13:59:22 From Daniyom Bekele to Everyone:

That's incredible, Derek! It takes a lot of self-awareness to decide to step back and let others take charge. Great job!

13:59:23 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:

Such a great quote, I agree, Richard!

13:59:24 From Elisa Cruz to All panelists:
Noting about us without us!

13:59:33 From Elisa Cruz to All panelists:
Nothing :)

13:59:35 From Yolanda Poston to Everyone:
I loved "start with the data!"

13:59:37 From Kinshasa Vargas-Pile to Everyone:
Take away= Course correcting is part of the process

13:59:38 From Jill Fuller to Everyone:
Main takeaway: we should all be willing to build an expectation of a willingness to reflect on ourselves as a starting point.

13:59:42 From Lewonda Gipson to Everyone:
Great conversation, especially if you're in the south and the acceptance of BIPOC in the workplace.

13:59:46 From missy solis to Everyone:
Thank you for sharing your stories and experiences. Many great tools to use moving forward.

13:59:49 From JUANITA BERGMAN to Everyone:
Thank you everyone for sharing your experiences and for all the resource links

13:59:50 From Brenna Prestidge to Everyone:
I appreciated the point about leadership taking a step back to help center and amplify voices that are muffled by having so many managers attend meetings.

13:59:54 From M.G. Maloney to All panelists:
YES!!!

13:59:58 From Maica Lelis-Her to Everyone:
appreciative of this Panel, I am in this dilemma of being innovate, part of equity, and constantly challenging and asking the hard questions. Thank you!

14:00:03 From M.G. Maloney to All panelists:
Love Emergent STrategy

14:00:07 From Mary Kate Downing to Everyone:
Thank you all for sharing your experiences with us!

14:00:08 From Annapurna Dandu to Everyone:
Thank you for an open discussion.

14:00:08 From Lalitha Nataraj (she/her) to Everyone:
I appreciated the opportunity to be in conversation with all of you! Please feel free to get in touch w/me via social media. I'm on Twitter as @librarian_lali

14:00:13 From Rachelle Gooden to All panelists:
Much thanks to the panelists!

14:00:14 From Morgan Mullins to Everyone:
Thank you everyone for being out here doing the work today! Really appreciate all the insights and resources.

14:00:19 From Nina Darlington to Everyone:
I'm so appreciative of your time, your expertise, the resources. I'll be taking this back to a group at our library that's been discussing/exploring these issues. Thank you!!!!

14:00:27 From Jenaya Myvett to Everyone:
Will the resources shared in the chat be shared with this recording

14:00:29 From Deb Ripley to Everyone:
Thank you

14:00:36 From Lisa Keefer to All panelists:
Wonderful resources!

14:00:37 From Magda Morris to Everyone:
Thank you!

14:00:39 From Taylor Schaffter to Everyone:
Thank you, panelists! So happy to call some of you my colleagues at Denver Public Library.

14:00:43 From Mary George to Everyone:
Thank you all!

14:00:46 From Kristin (she/her/hers) to Everyone:
Thank you!

14:00:46 From Amanda Decker to All panelists:
Thank you to y'all!

14:00:46 From Jason Penckofer to Everyone:
The idea of who has time to participate and why is a powerful one that I'll be thinking about. Thanks, panelists!

14:00:46 From Abby Garnett to Everyone:
Thank you to the panelists!

14:00:47 From Sue Barrows to Everyone:
