Dear Zena:

I have given a great deal of thought to the way that ALSC celebrates the awarding of the Newbery-Caldecott Medals at its annual conference. I would not like this celebration to lose its festive air or the formality of giving the awards or the acceptance speeches. However, I do not feel strongly about eating a large banquet meal as a part of the festivity. Wine and cheese, punch and cookies, or some such would certainly meet with my approval. I would very much like to include poor library school students, all children's librarians, and even some children at this festivity.

I look forward to seeing soon in Dallas!

Sincerely,

Beth
