Gale Research Award for Excellence in Business Librarianship recipient named

Lorna M. Daniells, retired business bibliographer from the Baker Library at the Harvard Business School in Cambridge, Mass., is the 1993 recipient of the Reference and Adult Services Division (RASD) Gale Research Award for Excellence in Business Librarianship.

The award, $1,000 and a citation donated by Gale Research, Inc., is given to an individual for distinguished activities in the field of business librarianship.

"Ms. Daniells was selected for her significant contributions to the field of business librarianship through her publications, especially her publication, 'Business Information Sources,'" said Violette Y. Brooks, chair of the Gale Research Award for Excellence in Business Librarianship Committee.

Daniells was an instructor at the Simmons College Graduate School of Library and Information Science. She is the author of many articles and bibliographies and has contributed to several books.

She has a long and extensive history with the Special Libraries Association (SLA) Boston Chapter. Daniells served as past president and director and currently serves as chair of the Bylaws Committee. She also
